1989 to 1992

Sally Fairfax is a presenter, news reader, reporter and producer, who has been working at various BBC radio stations throughout the north for the last 10 years. She is currently working at BBC Radio Humberside.

After leaving Kelvin Hall, Sally went on to do A levels at Wyke College, followed by a degree in French at Leeds University and a PGCE.

She started her career in broadcasting at Radio York, working as a co-presenter on the Saturday morning show for several years but she found that she needed a journalism qualification to progress in the industry.

She later undertook a post graduate diploma in bi-media broadcast journalism at Trinity and All Saints College, Leeds, which gave her work experience at various stations and helped to build up a good network of contacts.
